FOREWORD

BY W. A. HAYES

Vice President Wisconsin State Bar Association

Vice President American Bar Association

In giving the "Marquette Law Review" to the bench and the bar of Wisconsin, the students of the College of Law of Marquette University have undertaken a most commendable work. The institution, like the individual, grows through its ideals and lives by its spirit. There can be no progress but through striving to reach the ideal. There can be no life, except the life of the spirit. But the institution which would expand and fulfil its mission must make known its ideals and communicate its spirit. The most effective way of doing both is by means of a suitable magazine. The "Marquette Law Review," of which this is the first number, is such. The students who have produced it have, by so doing, taken a long forward step. They have thereby given concrete expression to lofty ideals. And they have shown a spirit of which older and more pretentious colleges might well be proud. Their efforts deserve to be supported by every member of the Wisconsin Bar, and it is earnestly hoped that support will be extended promptly and in generous measure.
